WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- There will be high fire danger in Southern California through Monday, keep wildfire safety in mind.
- A Red Flag Warning is in effect for the mountains and valleys of L.A. and Ventura Counties through Monday afternoon.
 - Moderate to strong Santa Ana winds will develop as offshore gradients strengthen across the region.
 - Gusty northeast winds will combine with warm, dry conditions and dry vegetation to bring critical fire weather conditions to portions of Southern California.
 - Temperatures will rise into the 80's across the valleys Sunday and Monday, with humidities in the teens and isolated single digits.
- Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A cold front is moving into the Pacific NW today. Mid and high clouds at the southern end of the frontal system are streaming over the North Ops region. A few very light rain showers are possible in far NW CA today and early Tuesday and higher elevations may see westerly gusts reach 30-35 mph. The remainder of the region will be dry with above normal temperatures today and Tuesday.

Strong high pressure just west of California will push that system off to the east by late Tuesday and skies will clear. Dry and warmer conditions will follow Wednesday through at least next weekend. N-NE/offshore surface winds will reach 25 mph in the typical areas from the western Cascade-Sierra slopes to the coast early Wednesday, and more gusty N-NE winds are expected each morning from Friday through Sunday down the western Cascade-Sierra slopes and in the northern Sacramento Valley. Overall, other than the light rain in far NW CA through early Tuesday, little to no rain is expected in the North Ops region for the next two weeks.

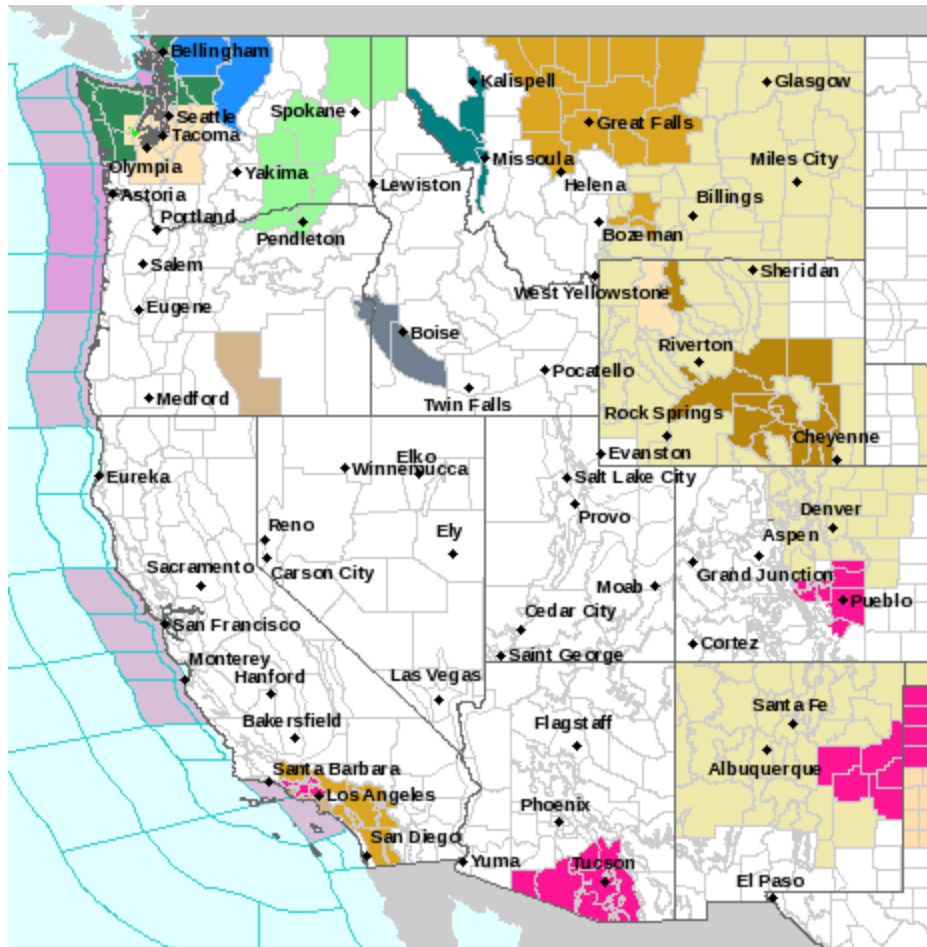

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Windy along with very warm and dry conditions today

Strong surface high pressure over the Great Basin will maintain northeast to east winds of 20 to 40 mph with gusts to 60 mph across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California this morning. This surface high pressure will weaken this afternoon causing winds to decrease and become light by Tuesday morning. A strong ridge of high pressure aloft will bring record heat to much of the area today, with 60s to low 70s across the mountains and San Joaquin Valley, 70s to low 80s in the coastal valleys of Central California, and 80s in the valleys of Southern California. The ridge aloft will weaken a little bringing a few degrees of cooling to the region both Tuesday and Wednesday. The most cooling will occur near the coast. There will be little change in temperature Thursday through this weekend as the ridge of high pressure aloft remains fairly strong. Most locations away from the coast will be 10 to 15 degrees above normal during this period and the valleys of Southern California will get into the low 80s. Minimum humidity will be in the single digits and teens away from the San Joaquin Valley and coast through Tuesday and then increase mainly into the teens Wednesday through this weekend. There will be local northeast to east winds of 10 to 20 mph with gusts to 35mph across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California Friday through this weekend. Otherwise, winds will be light Tuesday through this weekend.
